

At 75.2 in September 2019, the Housing Pulse was down 6.8 on last month's reading.

Uncertainty and stretched affordability in parts of the country are tempering sentiment; with households in all regions bar Connacht/Ulster paring back their expectations for future price gains this month. Rising supply has also helped take some of the edge off the market, though there is still a shortage of accommodation. This is a concern for businesses as well as individuals, with firms in Dublin, Munster and the Rest of Leinster citing housing as the priority area for investment to strengthen local economies.

Bank of Ireland

economic pulse