

The Housing Pulse rose for a fifth month running in September 2020, to 62.8. This was up 4.6 on last month's reading but 12.4 lower than a year ago. The share of households expecting house prices to rise over the coming year edged higher again this month to just over a third, while the share anticipating a fall ticked down towards a quarter, meaning the balance of positive and negative responses moved back into the black for the first time since March. On the rents side, expectations were also in positive territory in September, albeit a touch softer on the month.

Bank of Ireland

economic pulse